very handsome, small head, short ears, flat forehead, large nostrils, shoulder well back, strong for an Arab, although not large, short back, and tail well set on.

As to colour I must not be too fastidious. The only colours I particularly object to, are a dun and a light chestnut or sorrel. Those I like best are black, brown muzzle, very dark chestnut or dark bay — but of course I would not object to Bays of any kind or Greys — Age under six.

Pray believe me greatly indebted to you for the readings with which you have had the kindness to assist me, and call upon me without ceremony whenever and wherever I can be of use to you.

[CHARLES BURGESS TO HENRY BURGESS] Corfu,[29] July 23, 1835

We arrived here all well to day, after a very pleasant but fatiguing journey during the whole of which we had travelled night and day. The only unfortunate part of it was our not being able to get through the Neapolitan territories, owing to the absurd quarantine regulations of that government.[30] We had purposed going the most direct route to Corfu, on Rome, Naples, and across to Otranto on the opposite coast, there to embark for Corfu. When we arrived at Rome we found that the Neapolitans had made a new law that no persons coming from France either by Land or sea should enter their territories until they had been sixteen days in Italy, the cause of this was the Cholera having broken out with violence at Toulon and Nice. Of course we could not submit to this delay. We therefore went back to Ancona still in the Papal dominions and there embarked on board the Ionian steamer, which we were very lucky in catching. Had this "contreteins" not occurred we should have reached Corfu three days sooner, however we have much cause to be thankful that the Ancona route was open to us, for the sixteen days detention would have been bad indeed. On 25th, Captain Stewart, Johnstone[31] and myself leave for Zanta, thence to Patras, Corinth and Athens and then up the Archipelago to the Dardanelles. According to our calculations we hope to reach Constple in seven days, but it may be a day or two more than that, at all events we are all three inclined to use every possible dispatch. I do not think the Emma[32] will be gone as at this season ships usually make very long passages, in fact I would rather bett that I shall be at Constple before her than otherwise.

29 Charles is now on his way back to Persia after almost a year spent in England.

30 The inference here is that Charles has travelled overland, since his passage through plague-infested areas has made him subject to quarantine.

31 The British Army List for 1835 records a W. S. Stuart and Charles Cornwallis Johnstone as cadets of the Hon. East India Company's service, with temporary rank of Ensign while undergoing special training at Chatham. These may be the two accompanying Charles on the trip out to the East.

32 For a further account of the ship, Emma, see Charles's next letter.
